MAPCS is pleased to invite you to attend a professional development workshop designed to help private career school teachers become more proficient in the classroom. For your convenience, the workshop will be held twice, once at Montvale Plaza in Stoneham, Mass. on Thursday afternoon, March 5th and again at Salter College in West Boylston, Mass. on Friday morning, March 6th. It will be conducted by David Stanford, VP Community Relations for Premier Education Group.

Managing the Hard-to-Manage: Dealing with Difficult Students

Identifying the causes of poor student behavior and learning how to manage the classroom environment is the main objective of this seminar. This high energy, interactive workshop will equip instructors with techniques to manage the "difficult student". The session will reduce the frustration level of instructors while giving them clear examples and practical suggestions to improve their classroom management skills. Attendees will learn the essential skills needed to manage today's classrooms.

About David Stanford

David Stanford is a dynamic motivational speaker and trainer who delivers a strong message of self-motivation to his audience. His presentations call for professional and personal action. David is a nationally known speaker on career schools issues, personal motivation, higher education, and creative problem solving. He is a frequent presenter to professional organizations, corporations, universities, national conferences and graduation ceremonies. He helps clients to think "out of the box" when seeking solutions to staff morale and school performance issues. David's enthusiasm and high energy are contagious to his audience.

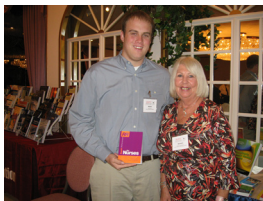

Currently, David is the Vice President of Community Relations for Premier Education Group, in Springfield, MA, which owns 23 career schools throughout New England and the Mid-Atlantic states.

David has over 20 years of experience as an administrator in higher education. He also has 12 years experience as a consultant with the private career school industry. In addition, David has eight years of major gift fund-raiser experience with the University of Toledo, Bowling Green State University and Bucknell University. He has 12 years of experience in Cooperative Education at BGSU, and has served as an admissions counselor for Thiel College in Greenville, PA.
